Never Trust a Mirror by Erin Hanson

Never trust a mirror, for a mirror always lies

It makes you think that all your worth

Can be seen from the outside

Never trust a mirror

It only shows you what's skin deep

And you can't see how your eyelids flutter

When you're drifting off to sleep

It doesn't show you what the world sees

When you're only being you

Or how your eyelids light up

When you're loving what you do

It doesn't capture when you're smiling

When no one else can see

And your reflection cannot tell you

Everything you mean to me

Never trust a mirror

For it only shows your skin

And if you think that dictates your worth

It's time you looked within
